SECTION A (10 Marks)

COMPREHENSION AND SUMMARY

Answer all questions in this section.

1. Read the passage below carefully and answer the questions that follow.

The Minister for Lands and Environment was Hon. Peter Msokonde. At thirty six, he was the youngest member of the cabinet and was one of my psychology students during his undergraduate days at the University of Dar es Salaam. Although he was generally below the average in his scholastic achievement at the University, he had nevertheless been a political activist among his fellow students, and his activities had not gone unnoticed by the party bosses. So active was he in the University Wing of the Youth League that immediately after the graduation he was appointed as one of the department heads at the ruling party headquarters.

From a humble beginning he climbed up the political ladder until finally, he headed the prestigious department of Mobilization and Propaganda.

During a minor cabinet reshuffle a year ago, His Excellence, the President, nominated Peter Msokonde a member of parliament and appointed him Minister for Lands and Environment. Such meteoric rise to positions of eminence is not uncommon in Third World Countries. All you need is to have your name mentioned at the right time to the right people. But if due regard is not given to such things as age, education and experience, and instead promotions are made on the basis of irrelevant reasons such as “this is one of us,” then one of two things may happen: either the incumbent gets spoiled by being inebriated by his own pomposity, or he breeds resentment among his more deserving subordinates.

Such was the case with Peter Msokonde. He was six years younger than Tom, his Permanent Secretary, ten years younger than me - Chris, his former professor, and twelve years younger than David Chambakane. In addition to the disparity in age, there were differences in educational level, Tom was the holder of the second degree in Economics and I had a second degree in Education while David had a doctorate in Mathematics. So the trip we were about to make to Sweden was to be led not only by the youngest member of the group but also by the least qualified academically.

The Hon. Minister invited David and I to his office a few days before our departure to tie up some loose ends related to with our impending trip. The Permanent Secretary was also in attendance at the meeting.

The young Minister was sitting behind an immaculately polished executive desk on which were placed two small flags: the National flag and the flag of the ruling party. When he saw me entering, he stood up and started moving to a side conference table.

“Hi, you are welcome” He said, showing me to a chair.

“You rarely come to my office. It’s good to drop in sometimes, even when you have nothing official to discuss. You’re my former teacher, so fill free to drop in anytime and give me moral encouragement.”

“Oh, that’s very kind of you,” I said. “But you people are so busy with matters of state, I hate to inflict myself on you unnecessarily.”

“Not you. You don’t need an appointment to see me. After what you did for me at the University, how can I dislike seeing you,” he said smiling broadly, and obviously recalling to mind the hours I used to spend giving him special tuition. Then he turned to look at Tom and said, “Over to you, Tom. What’s it we’re discussing?”

Questions

- (i) Hon. Peter Msokonde joined the cabinet because:
  - A he studied psychology at the University
  - B he was the youngest member of the cabinet
  - C he was a political activist
  - D he was a member of the University Youth League.

- (ii) The department that Msokonde was appointed to head at the ruling party headquarters was responsible for:
  - A making and implementing new programmes for the party
  - B spreading, influencing and recruiting new party members
  - C portraying a good image of the party to the members of the public
  - D challenging the other parties.

- (iii) The rise of Peter Msokonde from nowhere to a position of eminence is said to be common in the third world countries because:
  - A His Excellence the President had nominated him as an MP, thus enabling him to be a minister
  - B his name was mentioned to the president
  - C age, education and experience do count
  - D favouritism based on the slogan “this is one of us” do count in those countries.

- (iv) The narrator is urged to visit the Minister even if he doesn’t have anything official to discuss because the minister:
  - A needs encouragement from his former teacher
  - B has nothing to do in the office
  - C likes his former teacher
  - D wants to repay for the assistance he had received from him at the University.

- (v) Using the information from the passage, fill in the table the names, age and areas of study of the four men who met in the ministers side conference table, starting from the youngest to the oldest person.

Personal Particulars	Seniority
	First	Second	Third	Fourth
Name
Age
Area of study

2. Read the passage below carefully and summarise it in five sentences.

When preparing cake, one should consider choice and purpose of cake ingredients.

Flour is the basis of all cakes and so it is obviously just as important to choose the right sort of flour as to use the correct amount. Flour is called strong if it contains a large amount of gluten (more than 10%), and weak or soft if it contains a small amount.

Sugar gives cakes a sweet flavour and improves texture. Caster sugar is the best variety for most light cakes, because its small crystals dissolve easily during mixing; it also creams well to give a smooth texture. Sugar also adds colour to the crust and improves quality.

Fat for use in cakes should have the following qualities: It should cream well so that the cake mixture is smooth and light; Fat therefore contributes to volume by helping to aerate the mixture during creaming. It should make the cake 'short' or crumbly by coating the starch in the flour with an oily film so that the baked cake 'melts' in the mouth; It should be neither too hard nor too soft and it should have a good flavour of the fats used in cake making, such as margarine, butter and cooking fat. Butter is the best.

Egg white assists in trapping and in moistening the cake mixture; it also adds strength to the structure when it coagulates on baking. Egg yolk adds richness and colour. Eggs used in cakes should be fresh and of good quality.

Dried fruit adds sweetness and flavour to cakes. Fruits should be washed and dried before being added to the mixture and seeds if present should be removed. Care should also be taken to see that the mixture is stiff enough to support the fruit or the fruit will sink to the bottom of the cake.

12. Read the following poem and answer the questions that follow.

Behold!
The sun has arisen,
And with it the sons of the land have risen too
Forward they go
Well armed.
Singing praises to the beauty of the sunrise,
With the determination of long-term warriors,
Challenging the enemy
With the courage of free mind
And the vigour of a clean purpose.
Sit and wait brethren,
Wait and see what glory they bring at sunset;
How they pay homage to the land.
And their people!
