SECTION B (50 MARKS)

4. Read the following passage carefully and then answer the questions that follow:

Controlling anti-social human conduct is not easy. In many countries of the world there has been an increasing crime rate over the years. Crime rates are usually higher in large cities but have also been increasing in the suburbs and rural areas. In Tanzania and most countries, however, the majority of criminals are youths between the age of 16 and 24 years. Statistics also show that there are more male than female criminals but the proportion of female criminals is increasing.

Most authorities agree that crime is a major problem. There is no agreement, however, on the cause of crime and what can be done about it. Some of the reasons given on higher crime rate are poverty, unemployment, lack of education, population growth, alcohol and drug abuse. Other reasons include ineffective police protection, little chance of being caught or punished, break down in family structures, lack of parental guidance, televisions and films, race discrimination and disrespect for law. These factors in combination and others are all possible causes of increasing crime rate.

Although there is evidence that poor social economic conditions may be related to crimes, some of the highest crime rates are found in the wealthiest countries in the world. It is true, however, that some of these wealthy countries still have large number of poor people. On the other hand some of the poorest countries have the lowest crime rates. Rising population may also lead to more crimes because there are more people and less resources available for them.

In some countries, however, the crime rate has risen much faster than the population. Increasing the size of police force has not necessarily led to a decrease in crime in the United States. The same result is not likely to decrease crime in Tanzania. Family break down, a decline in moral standards and to a lesser extent, increasing use of drugs may contribute to the crime rate but these are not the only causes of crime.
